THE BUS TRIP

SUSIE was even too terribly excited to start the double strawberry malt that was placed before her in the red leather quilted booth at Eddie's Soda Shack.

Across from her sat her very dearest friend, Loraine, but not knowing the reason for Susie's excited phone call that brought her down to the Shack, she calmly glided her tongue across the frothy whipped cream on her spoon.

"H-how c-can you be so . . . so CALM!" Susie shouted, turning red when everyone else in the store turned around to stare. Then quieting down a little, she continued, "Why, this is the . . . the dreamiest thing that ever happened to us, LORAINE . . . did you hear?"

Now Loraine put down the spoon and stared. "Look here, Susie, you might be my best friend, but sometimes I think I'd like to choke you. For goodness sakes, tell me what it's all about before you blow a blood vessel."

"An invitation . . . from my cousin Julie who lives on a farm upstate . . . you know, Julie, the girl you met when she visited the family last year? Well, I got a letter from her and Aunt Martha, and they've invited me, and a friend, meaning YOU, to spend two weeks on the farm starting next week . . . the last two weeks before school starts."

But Loraine didn't hear the last few words. She was already picturing in her mind a way she could ask her mother and father for permission to go.

"Oh, don't look so worried, Lorrie," Susie confided . . . "I'm certain that when I show Aunt Martha's letter to your folks they'll agree to let you go with me. Now Let's see . . . I'll need a new pair of shorts."

"Green corduroy, I guess. Well, at least I mean green for ME." Lorrie smiled dreamily, as she pushed the sundae away.

As Susie had predicted, Loraine didn't have any trouble with her parents. When they saw Aunt Martha's invitation that evening, they phoned Susie's mother, and after a long conversation about almost anything except what the two girls were straining to hear, Mrs. Philips smiled and nodded 'yes' to her daughter. Two cheers went up, and when Loraine's mother explained she couldn't hear herself talk, she hung up, pleased that the two friends were so overjoyed at the prospect of the coming two weeks.

The girls spent the next few days shopping for shorts and tee-shirts, discussing whether a striped cotton skirt would be better with a white off-the-shoulder blouse or something more sporty. There were new loafers bought, new anklets, and then a very special box of candies for Aunt Martha, and a darling blue blouse for Julie.

The shopping was done, and then the exciting business of packing their suitcases was next. Loraine and Susie stuffed them until they could hardly snap the locks closed, but then they were ready.

Their mothers went along to the bus station, and all the way downtown they gave instruction after instruction to behave on the bus, not to stay off the bus too long at stopping points, not to forget to give Martha and Julie regards, and were they sure they had enough money? Susie and Loraine each slipped another five dollar bill into their purses as they waved good-bye and boarded the big shiny bus and took their seats.

The bus gave a powerful cough, and they were off. They looked out the window as they passed through the downtown section, then found themselves on the outskirts, where the little white frame houses whizzed by ever so quickly.

But soon the sight of little neat frame houses and green lawns began to bore the two friends. They started to talk about cousin Julie and the good time they would have with her.

"I . . . I really didn't mean to ask . . . but, does your cousin happen to have a . . . a brother?" Loraine smiled weakly.

"Why, Lorrie, I'm surprised at you." Susie scolded, and then frowned unhappily, ". . . no, I wish she did . . . maybe he'd have a friend or two. Oh well, we're going to have a wonderful time anyway."

Then a deep voice from behind them asked a question. They turned with questioning faces, to see a young, handsome soldier sitting alone in the double seat behind them.

"Er . . . could you girls let me have the time? You see, my watch has stopped." he said, pleasantly smiling as he shook his left hand to illustrate.

Loraine looked at the watch her dad had given her for her birthday. "Let's see, it's exactly ten minutes after two o'clock."

"Gosh, I guess the bus must have been delayed some in leaving Elmhurst . . . thank you."

His voice almost had a smile in it, and Susie pinched her friend's arm unnoticed by the soldier. Loraine just looked at her and grinned. He was certainly nice.

When the bus pulled to the first stop, in a small town called Blueville, the girls just stared out at the people who got off the bus and headed for the little luncheonette nearby.

"It's a twenty-minute stopover," the soldier offered, "and there's plenty of time for a sandwich and a coke. Did you girls have lunch?"

"Well, we had some lu . . ." Susie was startled when Loraine pinched her. Then she smiled and said, "Why, no . . . we were too excited to eat much!" Loraine breathed a sigh of relief.

"Well, suppose we stroll over to that place and order a trio of sandwiches . . . I'm starving. I haven't eaten since I left camp."

"Oh, you're on furlough?" Susie asked, as she and Loraine were being helped from the bus by the handsome soldier.

"Yes, I'm going to see my brother. My TWIN brother . . . everyone has trouble telling us apart . . . we're alike even to the freckle." the soldier laughed. "Say, we haven't even been introduced."

"My name's Susie Rollins, and this is Loraine Philips. We're on our way to my cousin Julie's farm for two weeks." Susie said.

"I'm heading for a farm, too . . . my brother's a farm-hand . . . ever since his discharge last month. I'm due for one myself in another three months or so. My name's Steve . . . Steve Potter." He offered his hand and shook the girls' hands warmly.

They ordered hamburger sandwiches and ice cream and cokes and the two girls were nearly speechless when Steve insisted on paying for the lunch. "Gosh," he explained, leading them back to the bus, balancing the three cokes in one hand, "on a farm a guy can't spend much money, and I've been saving for a furlough, so the treat's on me. Now, no remarks to the contrary."

While Steve arranged the lunch on a magazine across the empty seat, the girls whispered. "Lorrie, isn't he the DREAMIEST man? And to think, there's a twin brother . . . another boy, looking . . . (sigh) . . . exactly like him."

The bus started again, and it continued on for another two hours. The girls began to feel drowsy, but when the driver called out that the next stop would be Pleasantdale Station, they prepared to say good-bye to the boy they would probably never see again.

When Steve preceded them off the bus and helped them down, Loraine replied, "Oh, thanks, but you'd better get back on the bus. It's leaving right away."

"So what?" Steve laughed, taking the suitcases from their hands, "This is my stop too. And, HEY . . . THERE'S HAL, MY BROTHER . . . HAL . . . HAL!" he called.

The girls looked at one another, and then in the direction where Steve waved. There, standing together were cousin Julie, her arm in that of a blonde fellow, and standing next to her a boy that looked exactly . . .

"Exactly like Steve!" the two girls gasped. And standing near Julie.

The girls were a little dazed when they said their hellos to Julie. Then Julie smiled and said, "Loraine, Susie...I've got a surprise for you . . . I'd like you to meet my fiance, Dick Morris. I'm ENGAGED! And this is Hal Potter, Mom's new farmhand. I saw you talking to his twin brother when you got off the bus. Wasn't that a coincidence that you took the same bus?"

Loraine sighed, "It certainly was," looking dreamily at Hal Potter.

Susie breathed, "Oh, yes . . . quite a coincidence," looking dreamily at Steve Potter.

"Well, Mom has a big supper waiting for all six of us back at the house . . . let's head home," Julie said, tucking her arm further into Dick's.

And was it a coincidence that both Loraine and Susie were thinking at the same moment, "This is going to be even a nicer vacation than we'd hoped."

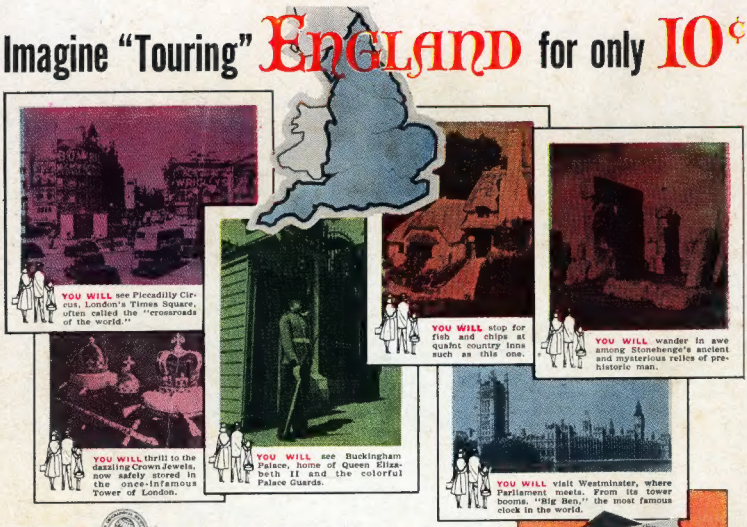
Imagine "Touring" ENGLAND for only 10¢



YOU WILL see Piccadilly Circus, London's Times Square, often called the "crossroads of the world."
YOU WILL stop for fish and chips at quaint country inns such as this one.
YOU WILL wander in awe among Stonehenge's ancient and mysterious relics of prehistoric man.
YOU WILL thrill to the dazzling Crown Jewels, now safely stored in the once-infamous Tower of London.
YOU WILL see Buckingham Palace, home of Queen Elizabeth II and the colorful Palace Guards.
YOU WILL visit Westminster, where Parliament meets. From its tower booms, "Big Ben," the most famous clock in the world.

THE AMERICAN GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY wants you to have this exciting "tour" of ENGLAND...plus a FULL-COLOR WALL MAP OF THE WORLD...a Combined $3.00 Value for only 10¢...to introduce you to the Around the World Program

YES, just one dime takes you on a "magic carpet" tour of Merrie England. Without stirring from your home you can explore every nook and cranny of this storied island. You will see the thatch-roofed cottage of Shakespeare's bride, Anne Hathaway . . . the White Cliffs of Dover . . . "the original round table of King Arthur," a circle of thick oak 17 feet across . . . the strange, ancient monuments of Stonehenge. You will ride a double-decker bus through Piccadilly Circus, the Times Square of London . . . visit the bell foundry where our own Liberty Bell was cast . . . and rest in the shade of the greenwood trees of Robin Hood's Sherwood Forest. You will get to know more about England than many tourists who actually visit there in person!
